The code is structured like this; class Data: def __init__(self,tag,value): self.tag = tag self.value = value class Test: def Test(self): data = Data("ONE",1) test = Test("TWO",2) return data,test def main(): datalist = Data() test1 = Test() list1 = [datalist,test1] print list1 exit() if __name__ == "__main__": main() I've tried to think about my code in different ways, perhaps I should create another class to group my functions? I can't think of a reason why this would be

It is a solemn day that also serves as a time for Americans to think about the future. With the passing of Justice Antonin Scalia, the Supreme Court is about to have a vital effect on every American citizen. The stakes are high, and the situation is dangerous for everyone. The Supreme Court is scheduled to soon hear arguments on the constitutionality of the major provisions of the Affordable Care Act. The precedent it sets could determine the course of healthcare policy for the next four years. On Wednesday, the Supreme Court will issue its opinion on whether the federal government can require people to buy health insurance. The vote is six-three in favor of the law. The stakes of the high court's ruling could not be higher. As first noted by George Will, if the Court strikes down the requirement for people to purchase health insurance, it would in effect be legalizing a massive government-run "health care system." This could include a "government takeover of nearly all health care," he writes. As we celebrate the holiday, we should also take pause and reflect on the future. The American people must keep the pressure on Congress to approve the construction of the Keystone XL pipeline. We must also urge the Supreme Court to issue its ruling in this historic case so as not to legalize the federal takeover of one-sixth of the nation's economy. (We should also reflect on the numerous federal "crimes" the Justice Department is prosecuting with a similarly nefarious purpose.) We also must call on the government to end its threat to execute Troy Davis in the near future. The execution of Troy Davis was one of the most divisive and controversial capital punishment decisions in American history. Recently, the Supreme Court even agreed to review the most recent evidence against Davis. Many people fear the death penalty because they regard it as cruel and unusual. Even the abortion industry has acknowledged this fact. As noted by the Planned Parenthood website, PP supports "the abolition of the death penalty." However, the government has no business executing citizens. We must also keep in mind that the government has taken numerous aggressive steps against the rights of the American people over the past month. In May, the Justice Department opened new inquiries into civil
