In Castles & Crusades Witches are not just House Demons or witch hunters, but are a core part of the society and culture of the Kingdom. While in Witch-Bot Megililo they serve as workers, miners, and even food for the growing masses of wizards and magicians seeking to learn and discover the mysteries of demon magick. The combat capabilities of the witch-bots are vastly superior to their human consorts, as they are mechanical in nature while the witches are mostly magical in origin. The rules presented here detail how the witch-bots function within the Castles & Crusades game setting, as well as how to role play them. What's new in Gun Club VR:

& Physically Enhanced Several thousand years ago, when our ancestors speculated they were the creators of the universe, they used the phrase “everything is made of atoms”. For reference, in the 20th century, a nuclear physicist would look at the title of an academic journal and attempt to find obscure references to atoms. A poetry writer would imagine herself at the village square in a novella. However, physicists lived in the field. They were precise. They were exacting. This is my excuse for employing a few loose analogies and metaphors in order to enter the world of quantum theory. In case you haven't looked at this site before, see the Features section for my take on this subject. Anyway, a time-honored attempt to grasp the nature of the universe is to start from a broader perspective and then try to specify various aspects, through dividing the subject up into component parts. So we have the three fundamental forces of Nature, which are electromagnetism, the weak and strong nuclear forces. One might impose several limitations. For one, the strong nuclear force will not apply to cosmic black holes. Since the strong nuclear force is stronger than electromagnetism, it would have influenced black holes once they developed. So, without doubting the strength of electromagnetism, a next step might be that, in stars, the strong nuclear force plays only a small role and so one would only pay attention to electromagnetism; this would enable one to study the physics of stars. Since every atom consists of three basic parts, i.e., electron, proton and neutron, in the language of pure science, our fundamental chemical elements are hydrogen, helium and carbon. Since those three are all relatively stable isotopes, one would only study the few stable isotopes, ignoring the rest. With some thought, one might then conclude that we can divide up the Universe of concern into objects made of matter, with different elements having varying proportions, and those matter objects interacting via electromagnetic fields. Great! Everything is made of atoms, and atoms can be viewed as major and minor elements. Except for the electromagnetic interaction between them, atoms are composed of an endless number of bosonic degrees of freedom, which are the electrons, neutrons and protons. The next step of course is to ask ourselves where do these inert, element-building parts come from? It may be some sort of cyclical process, such as a constant succession of births and deaths. This process would be best explained by asking

Retrovirus is a FPS shooter game that uses a N64 controller for the gamepad. The game was developed for the title "Play Game Link" a Nintendo 64 title by WizGames. The game was intended for the Nintendo 64 "Playlink" line of games, which included three games, Pooka's Muddy Water, Playground Games and Retrovirus. Retrovirus was available for a brief period of time from the eShop for the Nintendo 64. It was available on the Nintendo eShop for a limited time during the holidays in 2010-2011. First release: 2001 Platforms: Nintendo 64, Censorship: No A really superb FPS, and blessedly a six-axis one, made intricate through some really genuinely smart weapon design of the like not seen in a shooter for far too long. Some retro games from Nintendo 64 are not commonly known to be good, so I was pretty convinced to pass on this game as well, however, I am delighted to say that Retrovirus is not your regular kind of old school first person shooter, and that it is actually one of the most enjoyable of its ilk. The menu system is not huge, but the game did have some fairly extensive options if you're actually interested. The UI is pretty clean and to the point, so it actually made reading it quite simple. The game featured online multiplayer and it worked pretty well. It is noted that due to the quirks of the Nintendo 64 controller, it was not a perfect experience. Some weapons, especially the shotguns, can often seem a little off when you first play, and a certain amount of gamepad-gaming will probably be needed to master. The game itself is a brilliant shooter and as such, works pretty well on its own. It was beautifully designed, and the game never once got boring. The highly Nintendo-focused and retro music made it even more appealing. The only thing that really took away from the game was that it seemed to be missing the old school charm that these games are famous for. These are the kind of games that have a way of making you feel extremely old, however, Retrovirus is a game that could not be more accessible to modern players. It also almost makes you seem like you're playing an N64 game on your PC, so people of a more modern generation shouldn't be too shocked. I very much enjoyed this game. It may not have been the best game of

Gary, Mike Roberts (Violet Newcomb) forwarded a quote from another publication about the economic impact that commercial drones could have. Based on the quote, I think it would be a stretch to assert that business leaders in the U.S. are in a position to immediately implement commercial drones and assume no economic costs. So, I think the meeting on March 5 is a bit premature. Ed Mikolajczyk is right that we need to help build general awareness and we need to start thinking about potential uses. The CZM and SPE brochures and other materials are a good place to start. Let me know if I can help in any way. -----Original Message----- From: Ed Mikolajczyk [EMikolajczyk@cinergy.com] Sent: Thursday, March 15, 2002 10:28 AM To: Sunde, Bill; Seigle, Doug Cc: Ed Mikolajczyk Subject: Re: Experts: Commercialisation of drones GARY Bill and Doug: Ed Mikolaj
