In the section of 3 Man in the Middle Attacks i noticed that they said: If you're running web applications on a public web server, you need to implement a real authentication system to ensure that only the real users can access the system from the public domain. How to implement this real authentication? Should i run a virtual private server? A: You could use "Captcha", "Captcha2", "Captcha3" or "Web Authn" in the form of SSL certificate: SSL certificates are used for encryption and authentication by the Web; they are used with the HTTP protocol. Encryption is performed by the web server, and then the client gets a digital signature to show the server that it is who it claims to be. And if you want to use Captcha2 you can ask some help from read the

Download MEGA-DR.FUSION SLEEP BROWSE 2.0.3.2.Q: Can't see already installed softwares on Ubuntu Software Center I've just installed Ubuntu 14.04 and I couldn't find or access already installed softwares on Ubuntu Software Center. I've installed LibreOffice and I've found it on the Software Center but I couldn't find its launcher icon. I also couldn't find Open Office's icon. A: You probably are looking for "software-center". Not "ubuntu software center". The name change happened in Natty and above, and they haven't rolled back yet. See /usr/share/applications/software-center.desktop for this. Q: Can I get the pixel data using a byte offset into an array and not a row and column index? I'm working on an OpenGL ES 2.0 app for iPhone. I am using the AVFoundation framework and the AVCaptureSession to capture and process video frames. The image processing I plan to do is to apply a global thresholding effect. Basically I want to compare each pixel in the image against a pre-defined threshold, then save the pixel that crosses the threshold to a black framebuffer (and the rest to a white framebuffer). So far so good. I have implemented this in the following way. Step 1: I apply the global threshold and write the frames to the black (0,0) position of the RGB framebuffer. - (void)processFrame:(CMSampleBufferRef)frame { if (frame == NULL) { return; } CVImageBuffer
