The purpose of this article is to summarise the current state of knowledge about the photodynamic inactivation of pathogens in milk. It is a well-documented fact that milk is a rich environment for microbial pathogens. The milk acidity and the presence of fatty substances are factors with high inactivating capacity. This justifies the introduction of pre-treatment and sterilising systems in the dairy industry and in the medical sphere. Photodynamic inactivation of pathogens in milk can be easily and safely achieved. The inactivation of the micro-organisms is studied quantitatively and qualitatively, and, as a result of this, we are now able to determine the effectiveness of the various disinfectants. The system has also been shown to be safe for the public and for the consumers of milk. Furthermore, attention has been given to the production of active principles of photo-sensitisers by using environmental friendly routes. Last but not least, it is good news that this technique has been shown to be effective for the inactivation of most of the major pathogens.Genetic variants in the mTOR signaling pathway and the clinical outcome of pancreatic cancer. Pancreatic ductal adenocarcinoma (PDAC) is one of the most aggressive and lethal cancer, associated with various genetic abnormalities, especially oncogenic K-RAS mutations and inactivation of the p16 and p53 tumor suppressor genes. In this study, we investigated the role of genetic variants in the mTOR signaling pathway in the clinical outcome of PDAC. A total of 465 patients with histologically-confirmed PDAC and their full first-degree relatives, from 628 families, underwent comprehensive family history interviews and whole-genome genotyping. We evaluated the prognostic value of mTOR pathway genetic variants, including the mTOR, PIK3CA, PTEN, and TSC1/2 genes. Age at diagnosis of PDAC, and the ages at diagnosis of PDAC in the family members, were recorded. Patients were followed up for survival analysis. Survival analysis of 264 matched pairs indicated that patients with the PTEN c.710T>C (p.A237P) heterozygous variant had a significantly better survival rate than did patients without the
