A Frequency Division Duplex (FDD) communication system, which is a type of orthogonal frequency division multiplexing (OFDM) communication system, transmits a downlink signal and a receiver downlink signals to a wireless terminal using different frequencies and receives a received uplink signal and a receiver uplink signals from the wireless terminal using different frequencies. The FDD communication system is a type of a TDD communication system in which a downlink transmission and an uplink transmission are both performed in accordance with a pre-defined time-unit, but the TDD communication system has an advantage of lower power loss because uplink transmission and downlink transmission are performed at different times. The TDD communication system typically uses multiple channels such as a control channel and a data channel. Here, one frame is a basic time unit, and one subframe is a basic time unit on the control channel and the data channel. In particular, a basic time unit may be a 0.5 millisecond (ms) unit. When a time unit for frame, subframe or the like is defined, an orthogonality between transmission and reception is secured between different channels, or a characteristic of a channel is changed for interference between channels. As a result, the efficiency of wireless resource usage increases. According to the above, when an uplink channel in the same cell as a downlink channel for a frame, subframe or the like is set, a receiver in the same cell as a transmitter of the downlink channel may receive a downlink transmitted signal and a downlink noise through the same time and frequency resource unit. In addition, the receiver in the same cell as the transmitter of the downlink channel detects more interference noise than a receiver in another cell because a transmission power is higher in the same cell than the other cell, and thus the receiver in the same cell as the transmitter of the downlink channel detects a noise increase. On the other hand, a signal transmitted from the transmitter is well received in a scenario where the downlink channel of the transmitter and the receiver are located far from each other. Accordingly, it is a more severe problem to receive the downlink transmitted signal in a case where the downlink channel of the transmitter and the receiver are located close to each other. Thus, there is a need for a more efficient method of managing a wireless interface between a
